The Houston Chronicle Selects Real Estate Advertising Intelligence Solutions from WANTED Technologies

Montreal, October 24, 2006 – WANTED Technologies Corp. (TSX-V: WAN) announced today that the Houston Chronicle, an affiliate of Hearst Newspapers, has selected WANTED's new real estate advertising sales intelligence solutions.

Having experienced solid success with WANTED's sales intelligence solutions for recruitment advertising, the Houston Chronicle is laying the foundation to maintain market share and meet advertisers' needs by embracing the newest cutting-edge intelligence tool application from WANTED Technologies.

Todd Neal, vice president of classified advertising at the Chronicle, recognizes the need to keep a finger on the pulse of property sales in the Houston market. "We've been using feeds from the Multiple Listing Service (MLS) for years and now WANTED is providing an actionable, comprehensive complement to that information. We need to understand where ads are being placed online for property sales so we can take action and drive that business to our newspaper, both in print and online."

The sales representatives of the Houston Chronicle will receive intelligence reports for property sales ads in their markets and use those to prioritize and strategize sales contacts and presentations. The goal of WANTED's new tool is to open the door to more effective sales calls and to better serve the newspaper's advertisers by providing them with vital information, allowing them to increase ad revenue in that category.
